

MARK DUSTIN is a Melbourne based artist and arts educator from New Zealand whose practice questions the value and veracity of images in contemporary media saturated environments, part of his ongoing research into digital processes within the ever expanding field of contemporary printmaking. Dustin's work is an exploration of appropriated materials, which are borrowed from painting, printmaking, art history and design. Using iPhones to photograph, design processes to manipulate, and outsourced commercial print production methods, he creates work that investigates the methodology of digital printmaking in an attempt to re-encode ambiguity and challenge authenticity. Pushing printing technologies beyond their protocols, Dustin merges the digital and the analogue, creating one of a kind works out of infinitely reproducible source material.

Dustin's practice is one of ongoing inquiry into popular culture and media, representations of mortality, the construction of the image at the level of the pixel and exploration of established definitions of art production. Investigating the abstract image alongside the digital print is part of a wider attempt to deconstruct and examine the artifice in contemporary media environments.

Dustin is the Head of the Drawing & Printmaking Department at the Victorian College of the Arts, The University of Melbourne. He holds a PhD in Fine Arts from the Elam School of Fine Arts in Auckland. He has been a finalist in The New Zealand Painting and Printmaking Awards, Geelong Acquisitive Print Awards, and The North Shore City Art Awards.
